

Evans allowed that a language containing descriptive names like "Julius" would require a semantics whose background logic was "free". This seems to make it impossible for the semantics to differentiate between descriptive and nondescriptive names. The paper suggests a solution for Evans's approach.