

I argue that all that need be said from the point of view of language about self-knowledge is contained in the paper's title. There's no need to posit special senses, contents, or modes of identification that are distinctive of self-knowledge.